

- Do you need permission?
- What are your options?
- Types of furnishings
- How to dispose of your furnishings
- Our role in the process

Over the centuries, each generation has renewed and added to the rich inheritance of furnishings for liturgy, devotion, mission and remembrance in our church buildings. From time to time, individual items may go out of use and others take their place.

We have a careful process for dealing with items which are no longer needed for church life.

Download our guidance

- Fonts
- Redundant organs
- Seating
- Disposals and Loans
- When to consult the Church Buildings Council

Interior of Church

Image not found or type unknown

Remember: This process of renewal and change must be carefully managed to make sure that the needs of the present generation are served with proper respect to the faith and contribution of past generations.

Do you need permission?

The permanent or long-term removal of an item from a church is called a disposal.

In the majority of cases a disposal will need faculty.

In your application, include:

- A statement of significance which describes the significance of the item and assesses the harm that will arise from its disposal.
- A statement of needs setting out why you no longer need the item and how disposing of it will benefit mission and worship.

The disposal of historic, archaeological or artistic items will harm the significance of the church.

You need to show how the need for mission and the benefits for worship outweigh that harm.

Back to top

What are your options?

Decisions on disposals follow a basic principle:

Moveable items do not belong to the Parochial Church Council. They belong to the parishioners at large. And the churchwardens act as custodians on their behalf.

When assessing your application, the chancellor will consider the following options:

Keeping the church's property intact

The default position is to keep as much of the church's property as possible. Any option other than this will need to be justified by making a case for disposal, assessing the significance of the item, its association with the parish, and any potential benefits of disposal.

Giving the item to another parish

If you've made a case for disposal, then the preference is for you to give the item to another parish (where appropriate).

It will continue in shared use and church ownership. And this will limit the impact on its significance.

Loaning the item to your diocesan treasury or a museum

The chancellor can choose this option for items of particular interest, especially those which would benefit from specialist care.

Selling the item

For very important items, there is a general presumption against sale.

This means that it is up to you to make a strong case if you wish to sell something. The more valuable or significant the item, the higher the bar is set.

For a "treasure" you need to show that you face a financial emergency.

And even then, the preference is for you to sell it to an institution, which will keep the item in this country and provide public access to it, rather than an open market sale.

The need for money to fund another part of maintaining or developing the church is not considered a justification for sale.

Find out more on disposals.

Back to top

Types of furnishings

Fonts

Find out more about fonts and the factors you should consider if you want to replace your church's historic font

Organs

Find out more about organs. See especially the guidance on redundant organs

Bells

Find out more about historic Bells and bell frames

Seating

Find out more about historic seating and how to assess its significance. Our guidance also covers the factors you should consider if you want to replace any of your church's historic seating.

Remember: A proposal to dispose any item of significance needs to be supported by a statement of significance and needs.

Include a willingness to record the item to a suitable standard and deposit the record in an archive as well as your inventory and terrier. This will provide some mitigation of the harm to its significance.

Back to top

How to dispose of your furnishings

Once you have your permission for disposal, you can look for a home for your item in your diocese:

Contact your diocesan furnishings officer

You can advertise more widely to all dioceses and other interested bodies:

Advertise on the central contents register. This is a list maintained by the Church Commissioners and is updated every three months. It includes details of specialist groups which can help find suitable homes for some types of item (e.g. bells, organs, stained glass). Contact the Church Commissioners to advertise on the register (select the Enquiry Topic of Church Property and land)

Back to top

Our role in the process

The Church Buildings Council advises parishes and dioceses on proposed disposals.

We give advice on a case by case basis for items of special interest.

It is mandatory for the chancellor to consult us about the disposal of items under Rule 9.6. If there has been early consultation with us it can satisfy these requirements.

Find out more

Back to top

Also of interest

Interior of Priory church, Boxgrove

Image not found or type unknown

Apply for a conservation grant

See if you fit our criteria

Gloucester church exterior on cloudy day

Image not found or type unknown

Our advice and guidance

Everything from chairs, churchyards, news works to conservation

Making changes to your building

Let us help you develop your project

Exterior view of St Andrews church Handsworth

Image not found or type unknown

Statutory Advisory Committee on Closed and Closing Churches

Find out more about what we do

Source URL: <https://www.churchofengland.org/resources/churchcare/church-buildings-council/how-we-manage-our-buildings/furnishings-no-longer>