

A large number of the freehold interests within the Hyde Park Estate (approximately 1,700 residential properties, commercial and retail units) are owned by the Church Commissioners for England.

Based on a Georgian model grid pattern, the Hyde Park Estate was initially developed in the 19th Century. It originally belonged to the Bishop of London before being transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (who later became the Church Commissioners) in 1836. Whether you're planning to move to the area or want an alternative day out in a quieter part of London: the Hyde Park Estate is here for you

Visit the Hyde Park Estate for the day and explore tranquil gardens, cobbled streets and finish up in Connaught Village for afternoon tea, a luxurious lunch or dinner. There are plenty of options available in this little-known quarter of West London.

Based in a fantastic, central location the Hyde Park Estate feels like a world away from the chaos of Oxford Street shoppers but is little more than a short walk.

Visit us on the Hyde Park Estate to discover it for yourself.

Walk or Cycle

The Hyde Park Estate is bordered by Sussex Gardens, Bayswater Road and Edgware Road. The Estate itself is relatively small and can be covered on foot or by bicycle. Connaught Street is the main shopping road but visitors should head off the main road to find independent cafes and small boutiques.

Tube

The closest London Underground stations include Lancaster Gate (Central Line), Marble Arch (Central Line) and Paddington (Hammersmith & City, Circle, District and Bakerloo lines).
