Welcoming the appointment, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Justin Welby, said: "Flora has an exceptional record of service to the Church and will be a valuable addition to the Church Commissioners' leadership.

"I am very pleased that Flora is joining the Church Commissioners, bringing to this role her breadth of ministerial experience, her extensive leadership and theological expertise and her service as a senior member of staff at Lambeth Palace."

Commenting on her appointment, Canon Winfield said: "I welcome the opportunity to make this contribution to the life and work of the Church of England in a time of change, development and possibility, as we respond to Christ's call to grow as disciples, building on our historic inheritance and looking forward together with confidence and hope."

The Bishop of Manchester, David Walker, deputy chair of the Church Commissioners, said: "Flora's deep faith, experience with the Church at a local and international level and passion for furthering the Kingdom of God makes her an ideal Third Church Estates Commissioner. I am very much looking forward to working with her in this role."

Canon Winfield has taught ecclesiology and church history and has published books and articles in the field of ecumenical theology. In 2010, she was awarded a DD by Virginia Theological Seminary for her 20 years of service to the Communion as a theologian.
