

WEDDINGS

Engaging with the Engaged

In 2008 the Marriage Measure opened up the possibility of a church wedding to thousands more couples. Culture continues to change – and a new generation are making choices about weddings and marriage. How does the church engage with couples as they make choices about their wedding day and the life they share together? What impact does attending church have on faith?

Exciting new research looks at how ordinary church going makes a difference to wedding couples, and helps us to understand more about couples making choices today – and over the next decade.

- Find out how going to church changes attitude
- Discover why, when and how couples make a choice about church weddings
- Hear how churches have increased the number of weddings in recent years
- Explore the importance of relationship, invitation and welcome
